“Street Coins” Photography Exhibition at the Baltimore Public Works Museum until September 11, 2005

Baltimore City has well over 31,000 manhole covers that are vital to public works, guarding the entrance to an underground world of sewers, pipes and conduits. The Baltimore Public Works Museum is featuring “Street Coins” a new exhibition of photographs by Bob Carlson showing the graphic beauty of hand box, meter, valve and manhole covers from Baltimore City and County. Carlson, a civil engineer, believes that manhole covers provide a “different perspective on Baltimore” and “give mute testimony of the life processes that lie just beneath the surface.” The exhibition will be on display until September 11, 2005.
